Design and Lore Book
56 pages | size A5
Art paper 120 g colored

Contents :

Lore and world building, character files, images, sketches and unused concepts.

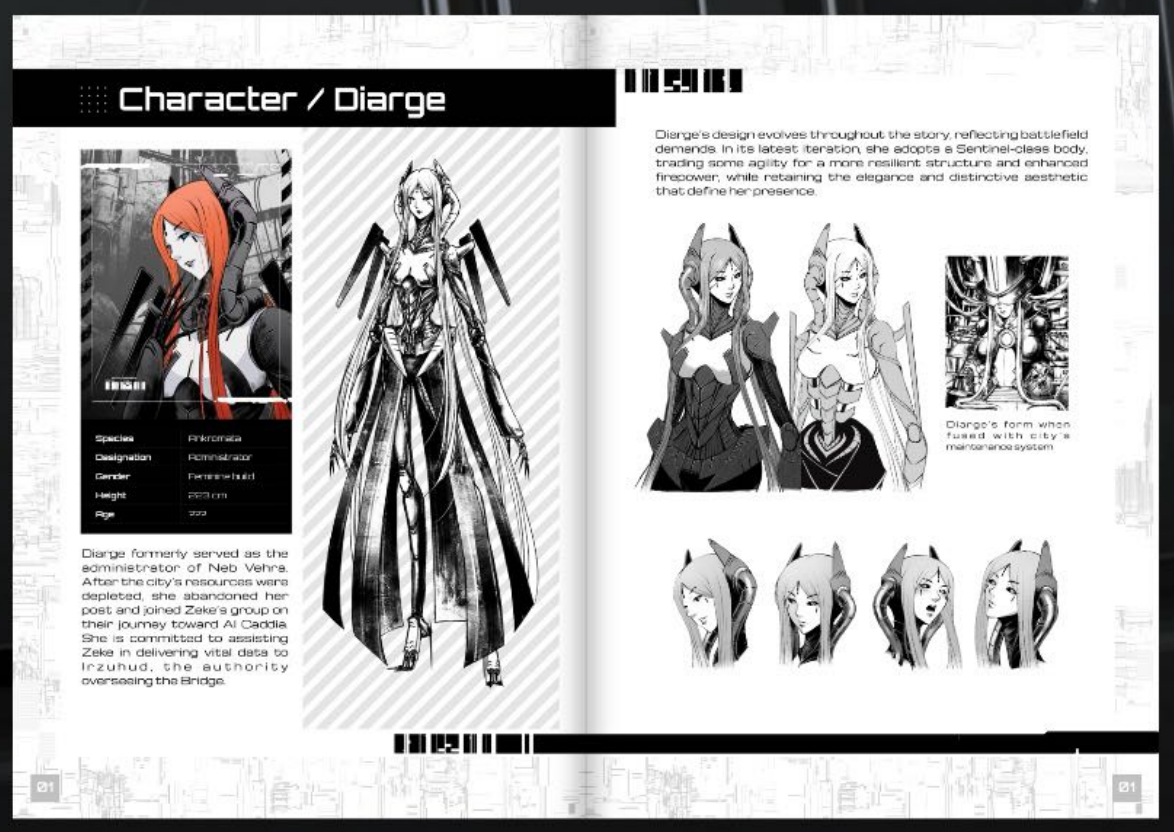

The fall of the world did not begin with political collapse or technological hubris. It began with the arrival of something extraterrestrial, parasitic, and incomprehensibly adaptive, known simply as the Devourer.

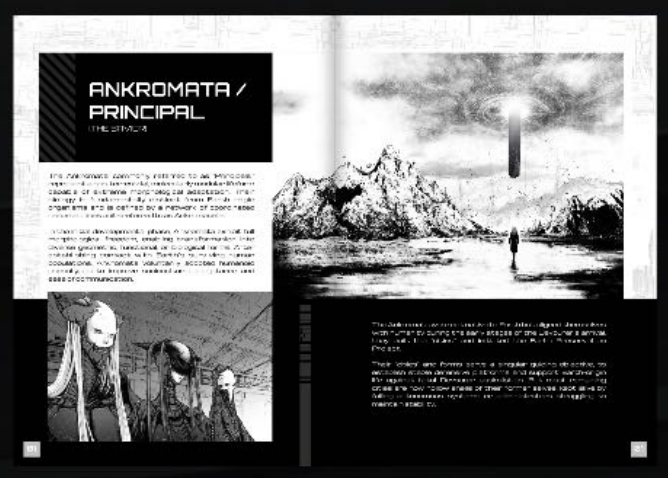

The first Devourer cells fell to Earth during a meteor event. For weeks, they seemed harmless, microscopic fragments with unusual bio-signatures. But once they made contact with terrestrial lifeforms, plants, animals, even microorganisms, the infection spread with terrifying speed.

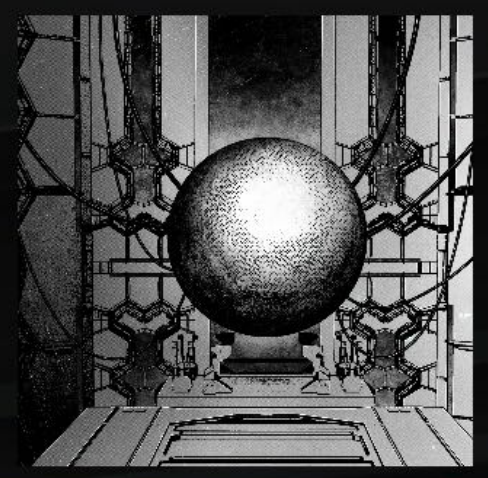

Infected organisms mutated uncontrollably. Nervous systems rewired into aggressive, predatory behaviors. Bodies reshaped into grotesque hybrids.

Entire ecosystems collapsed within months. These twisted creatures were collectively referred to as Corrupted Beings. But the worst was yet to come. Devourer cells did not merely corrupt life, they began to consume the planet itself. Over time, the cells spread beneath the soils, merged with minerals and groundwater. Converted dirt, stone, and metal into flesh-like organic masses.

The land began to pulse, vein-like highways of tissue grew across valleys. Some regions became living plains, while others hardened into chitinous ridges or opened into cavernous maws that swallowed anything that approached. Traveling across them is a constant gamble, the terrain itself can shift, regenerate, or lash out.
